GEORGETOWN'S HISTORIC CALL BOXES A Critical Need and a Unique Opportunity

Georgetown's 30 historic police and fire call boxes—the boxes once used to summon the police or fire department before homes had telephones—are in critical need of being restored. The call boxes, installed in the 1860s, became obsolete with the introduction of the 911 emergency system. Totally abandoned in the 1970s, these distinctive structures that dot our neighborhood have been neglected and are in disrepair and deteriorating—some are even in danger of being destroyed.

The Citizens Association of Georgetown is spearheading the much-needed restoration of the charming old call boxes. These handsome structures will not only be saved but also become unique markers for our cherished local history.

This Citizens Association of Georgetown project is part of a citywide initiative to restore all call boxes, neighborhood by neighborhood. Working with Art on Call (a program of Cultural Tourism DC), CAG has identified and surveyed Georgetown's call boxes and prepared a plan to reuse the boxes as showcases for our neighborhood history.

RESTORATION PLAN

CAG has already restored four boxes: one at Potomac and M Streets, one on R Street in front of the Georgetown library, one at 27th and P Streets, and another at Reservoir Road and 34th Street. The beautifully restored boxes will help raise awareness of this exciting project.

All the boxes will be restored in a dignified and elegant style, have a consistent look, and promote Georgetown's history, particularly our neighborhood anecdotal history. The open part of the boxes facing the sidewalk will contain a bronze plaque bearing the history of the surrounding neighborhood. The back of the boxes will display a plate with the names of the District sponsoring organizations and the local sponsors of each box. Since some of Georgetown's boxes are on commercial streets, CAG is also seeking sponsorships from businesses adjacent to the boxes.

Having received unanimous endorsement from the CAG Board, the ANC, the Old Georgetown Board, and the U. S. Commission on Fine Arts, Georgetown's project has received a seed money grant from Art on Call. This money has enabled CAG to do the four prototype boxes, but we need community donations to complete this important project.

Additional funding for the project will pay for replacement parts for the boxes, which require custom casting, the bronze plaques, priming and final painting. The average cost per box is $1500. CAG is seeking donations from residents and businesses for this high visibility project with prominent tangible results. It will be featured in newspapers, our newsletter, and at community meetings—and major donors will be permanently noted on the historic boxes themselves. These structures are a charming and integral part of our local history and they offer a rare opportunity to add significantly to the historic character of Georgetown.
